Fischer & Friends, <http://www.frankfischerundfriends.de>

25-26 January and 20 March 2012, MARUM, Bremen

Objectives

In this classroom training, all relevant aspects of Project Management will come alive in sample projects chosen by the participants. The participants (in groups of 3 – 4) will experience each phase of the “simulated” project, discovering what constitutes actual work on a project and the hurdles that may need to be overcome. The group-dynamic process during the project work will be displayed as a learning experience, and together, solutions will be found.

This learning by experiencing, coupled with the subsequent teaching from the trainer, will prepare the participants for the important principles, process models and methods in Project Management. During the training, the basic elements of Project Management will be practiced and employed along with the important social aspects of working on a project
